

Sound & Music Score

Everything the audience hears, act by act — what plays, how it is made, and the cue that starts and stops it. Six Characters in Search of an Author · Village Players, Lausanne · dir. Kiarash Jamshidi

SILENCE

The music, piece by piece

1. Erik Satie — Gymnopédie No. 1 LIVE PIANO

Act Two, the Setup — solo piano under the Step-Daughter's shower monologue, once through.

2. Weimar-cabaret vamp — suggested: Kurt Weill, Bilbao Song (half tempo), or a vamp on Mistinguett's Mon Homme LIVE PIANO

Act Two, the Apparition — continuous under Madame Pace; reprised “in tatters” in the Substitution, ending on one held chord.

3. A single struck piano note PIANO · offstage / recorded

Act Three, the Refusal — one note like a slap at “You can force him, sir.”

4. Arvo Pärt — Spiegel im Spiegel (opening phrase) RECORDED

Act Three, the Fountain — the closing ten seconds, then blackout.

5. French chanson — suggested: Aznavour, La Bohème (or a scratchy Piaf — La Vie en rose, Sous le ciel de Paris) RADIO · wings

Act One, the Rehearsal — a wings radio, low and crackling.

6. Prenez garde à Tchou-Tchin-Tchou SUNG LIVE

Act One, the Interruption — sung live by the Step-Daughter, as the script requires.

PIANO The live pianist plays in Act Two only: Satie's Gymnopédie No. 1; the Weimar vamp (Weill / Mistinguett) and its tattered reprise; the single held chord at the curtain. In Act Three the piano is heard just once — one note, offstage or recorded. The Spiegel im Spiegel coda is recorded (piano and violin). Everything else the audience hears — the cello drone, the fountain water, the gunshot — is sound, not music.

Act One — The Family

Three colours, one per part. White working light → amber → deep red. No piano in this act.

PART I — THE REHEARSAL RADIO · wings

An old French chanson on a small radio in the wings — crackling, low, domestic, as if the company forgot to turn it off. Suggested: Aznavour, La Bohème (low), or a scratchy Piaf record (La Vie en rose, Sous le ciel de Paris).

CUE Plays under the whole rehearsal. Cuts off the instant the Door-keeper speaks.

PART II — THE INTERRUPTION SUNG LIVE

No instrument — “the warmth is the score.” The only music is the Step-Daughter's own: she sings Prenez garde à Tchou-Tchin-Tchou, live, as the script requires.

CUE Her song during the dance, where the script places it. Otherwise the amber wash carries the act.

PART III — THE BARGAIN

SILENCE

No music. The silence under the deepening red is the texture.

CUE Held to the end of the act — the cue into Act Two is the absence of sound.

Act Two — The Theatre

A small upright piano sits stage-right on the lower floor, in view all act. The pianist is a credited performer (a fourth Player, in effect), plays from their seat, and does not speak. The shower is a single overhead column of light, used three times.

PART I — THE SETUP

LIVE PIANO

Satie — Gymnopédie No. 1: slow, simple, repeated, child-haunted. Played once through, beneath the Step-Daughter's monologue alone in the shower.

CUE Begins as the shower falls on her. Ends on her last line — the Child-bundle set down, the revolver back in the coat.

PART II — THE APPARITION

LIVE PIANO

A slow, sleazy Weimar-shop vamp — comic-cabaret — under Madame Pace's whole aria. Suggested: Kurt Weill, Bilbao Song at half tempo, or a vamp on Mistinguett's Mon Homme.

CUE Plays continuously from her entrance through the transaction. Dies mid-bar on the Mother's “You old devil. You murderess.”

PART III — THE SUBSTITUTION

LIVE PIANO

Fragments of the Madame Pace vamp, in tatters — as if rehearsing the same tune badly — while the Leading Lady and Leading Man take the platform. Then a single held piano chord.

CUE Returns cautiously for the doubled scene. Cuts out the moment the Mother's cry begins and does not return; one chord held as the accidental curtain falls.

Act Three — The Question

Dark stage; the fountain basin lit from inside, pale blue; one bare bulb swinging over the Manager's table. The pianist's chair is empty — no live piano in this act.

PART I — THE TRAP

CELLO DRONE

A single sustained cello drone, very low — one barely-varying note, felt rather than heard, giving the room a pulse. Suggested: a sustained low C, or a low organ pedal-tone.

CUE Under the whole philosophical stretch. Dies as the Step-Daughter cuts the Father with “His reality. He always knew exactly where to find me.”

PART II — THE REFUSAL

SILENCE

PIANO · offstage / recorded

Silence — only footsteps and breath. One exception: a single sharp piano note, like a slap (offstage or recorded — the pianist's seat is empty now).

CUE The note sounds as the Father seizes the Son at “You can force him, sir.” Then silence again.

PART III — THE FOUNTAIN

WATER · live or recorded

RECORDED

The sound of water — the fountain itself — and, at the very end, the opening phrase of Arvo Pärt — Spiegel im Spiegel (about ten seconds).

CUE Water enters at the start and stays, louder as the Step-Daughter nears the basin; the gunshot is real, in real silence (the water briefly stops). The Pärt opens after “To hell with it all.” and the Manager's exit — then the lights go.

One rule over all of it: the score should be felt, not heard — the audience need not know they are being scored. The only musician on stage is the Act Two pianist; everything in Acts One and Three is the wings radio, a low recorded drone, the live (or recorded) fountain, an offstage note, and the Pärt coda. The cues above are fixed; the suggested tracks are taste.
