the diva and the props

Six Characters in Search of an Author

Sei personaggi in cerca d'autore · Pirandello, trans. Storer 1922

A Village Players production · Lausanne

Director: Kiarash Jamshidi

44 SPEECHES · 431 WORDS ACROSS THE PLAY

WHO PLAYER 2 IS

Carries the Leading Lady, the Property Man, the Fourth Actor, and the Second Lady Lead. About thirty-five — and the real working professional Player 1 only impersonates. She is some years younger than him and a great deal better at the job: she has already played leads at the Lausanne houses — a Marivaux at the Vidy, a Beckett at the Pulloff they still talk about — and she has had drinks with everyone on the cantonal arts council at some point. She is not the eldest in the room; she is the one who actually books the work, season after season, while the older man beside her recites the career he meant to have. She does not need to say so. Her authority is in her shoulders, not her years.

She plays four roles, but always as herself, just as Player 1 does. Her Leading Lady is weary, slightly offended, deeply professional — the diva is real, the diva is earned, and at thirty-five she is already a little tired of having to be one. Her Property Man is the same woman in a different posture: efficient, no-nonsense, vaguely irritated, the patience the director has personally exhausted. She chose to do the props this season because the company could not afford a real Property Man and she was not going to let the show open without a folding screen. She is not ashamed of either register. Both are work. Both are paid in francs.

The transition between the two is in the bearing — chest lifted and chin raised for the Leading Lady, shoulders down and weight forward for the Property Man — and the audience should come to read the flip without any prop signalling it.

The arc to score: in Act One she watches the Six arrive with the patience of a woman who has seen weirder things in this profession. In Act Two the Father asks the actresses for their hats and she gives him hers without a word; then she climbs onto the upper platform to play the Step-Daughter, and is laughed at by a much younger woman who has actually been through the room she is being asked to fake. That laugh is the wound. By the time she says I have been made a fool of by better, she means it. She has been. By Act Three she would like to be at home with the cat. She is one of the Players who, by then, knows the play has run away from them and is being polite about it. The hat-rack and the prop trolley are both her territory — and so is the bar afterwards.

THE PLAY, AND HOW IT BEGINS

What it is. Pirandello's Six Characters in Search of an Author (1921). A theatre company's ordinary rehearsal is interrupted by six figures — a Father, a Mother, a Step-Daughter, a Son, and two silent children — who claim to be unfinished Characters, abandoned by their author, and demand that their drama be staged. The evening is the collision between their fixed, unbearable story and a working company's attempt to turn it into theatre.

This production. Set in Lausanne, played by nine live performers with two stage objects in place of the two youngest children (a coat-and-chair for the Boy, a wrapped bundle for the Child), on three stripped settings — no projection, no screen. One interval, after Act One; the second half plays unbroken to the fountain.

How it opens. The curtain is already up on a half-lit working stage. The Village Players are dragging themselves into a rehearsal of another Pirandello play, Mixing It Up — the Manager arrives tired and behind, there is the business of the cook's cap, the Players bicker. Then the working lights soften to a strange amber: the Door-keeper carries in the Boy-chair, and the four family Characters walk on, the Step-Daughter already holding the Child-bundle. From that entrance the play has begun, and it does not let go.

HOW TO READ THIS BOOK

Everything this role says and does, in performance order, grouped by act and by part. Each speech is preceded by a short CUE — the tail of the line before it — so you can find your entrance. Where the role doubles a function, the function is printed beside the line (as Prompter, and so on); chorus lines the company speaks together keep their group tag (All Three Players). Blocking lives in the bracketed action cues inside the speeches. The text is pulled byte-for-byte from the Director's Copy, so it always matches the current script.

Act One — The Family

PART I The Rehearsal

8 SPEECHES · 59 WORDS

CUE The Manager: ... somebody with “thoughts about the theatre,” burn it before I read it.

PLAYER 2 [she has been at work an hour; not looking up from her clipboard]. It’s all three, Hakim. The same envelope.

CUE The Manager: ... — if the house has any left to spare us this evening.

PLAYER 2 [a light comes down on to the stage]. Half light. It’s what’s left.

CUE Player 1: The public came back for the third act once.

PLAYER 2 [not looking up]. For you?

CUE Player 1: It was raining.

PLAYER 2 [still not looking up]. Then let’s pray for rain.

CUE The Manager: Elena — fix up the old red room.

PLAYER 2 [noting it down]. The red room is blue now. We painted over it in March.

CUE The Manager: Then make it red.

PLAYER 2. With what, sir? Hope? [a beat] Same flats as the blue room. I’ll turn them round.

CUE Player 1: ... years of it, and not one inch built on a cook’s cap.

PLAYER 2 [not looking up from her clipboard]. Fifteen years. And the cap is what finally finishes you.

CUE Player 1: I’d sooner resign.

PLAYER 2. He resigns every Tuesday.

PART II The Arrival

1 SPEECH · 11 WORDS

CUE The Father: No, sir, only for a moment... in you.

PLAYER 2 [chin up, the diva back; sotto voce to Player 1]. They want to live, in us... as if there were room.

PART III The Veil

1 SPEECH · 6 WORDS

CUE Player 1: What a spectacle. What an absolute...

PLAYER 2 [lower now]. We are the audience this time.

PART IV The Defence

3 SPEECHES · 32 WORDS

CUE The Father: ... all the evil that can come from good, what would we do?

PLAYER 2 [who has been biting her lips with rage at seeing the Leading Man flirting with the Step-Daughter, coming forward to the Manager]. Hakim — mais sérieusement — are we going to rehearse today, or not?

CUE The Father: ... — toward the family that had come into being through my will.

PLAYER 2 [the back of a script suddenly being used as a notepad]. Should we be writing this down? Some of it sounds important.

CUE The Step-Daughter: You walked into that room by yourself.

PLAYER 2. Pardon — did we just witness a confession?

PART V The Hinge

PLAYER 2 DOES NOT SPEAK IN THIS PART.

PART VI The Bargain

4 SPEECHES · 41 WORDS

CUE Player 3: They are not ordinary strangers.

PLAYER 2. No. Ordinary strangers do not arrive with a tragedy already rehearsed.

CUE Player 3: Perhaps there is a play.

PLAYER 2. There is always a play. The question is whether anyone is being paid to be in it.

CUE Player 1 (as Door-keeper): I only let them in.

PLAYER 2. That is not a defence.

CUE Player 3: Am I taking this down?

PLAYER 2. Take everything down, Arsenii. It may be evidence.

Act Two — The Theatre

PART I The Setup

11 SPEECHES · 75 WORDS

CUE The Manager: ... and see if there isn't a sofa or divan in the wardrobe...

PLAYER 2 [the Property Man's voice, flat and certain]. There's the green one. It is the sofa we have.

CUE The Step-Daughter: ... the little table! The little mahogany table for the pale blue envelope!

PLAYER 2 [to MANAGER]. There's that little gilt one.

CUE The Step-Daughter: ... screen! There must be a screen. Otherwise how am I to manage?

PLAYER 2. That's all right, Miss. We've got any amount of them.

CUE The Manager: See how many we've got and bring them all.

PLAYER 2 [a half-nod; she is already on her way]. Right.

CUE The Manager: ... Clear the stage, ladies and gentlemen! Come over here and listen attentively.

PLAYER 2. But, excuse me, we...

CUE The Manager: What is there to laugh at?

PLAYER 2 [indignant]. Nobody has ever dared to laugh at me. Nobody. I insist on being treated with respect — otherwise I go.

CUE The Manager: You should feel honored to be played by...

PLAYER 2 [at once, contemptuously]. "That woman there"...

CUE The Manager: ... if possible, a pale blue one; and give it to that gentleman.

PLAYER 2. An ordinary envelope?

CUE The Manager and The Father: Yes, yes, an ordinary envelope.

PLAYER 2. At once, sir. [She waves a Stage Hand off to fetch it.]

CUE The Step-Daughter: How I'll play it, how I'll live it!...

PLAYER 2 [offended]. I'll live it too, you may be sure, as soon as I begin!

CUE The Father: ... the ladies will be so kind as to take off her mantle...

PLAYER 2. Why our hats?

PART II The Apparition

1 SPEECH · 8 WORDS

CUE Player 3: ... she come from? She wasn't here a moment ago. She wasn't anywhere.

PLAYER 2. It's some trick. Someone arranged this. [the certainty leaves her] ...Didn't they?

PART III The Substitution

PLAYER 2 [the diva fully present; she has done a thousand scenes harder than this]. Of course. It's easy enough.
[To LEADING MAN.] Shall you and I try it now?

| CUE The Manager: ... written out properly after. You remain here... oh, where are you going?

PLAYER 2. One minute. I want to put my hat on again. [Goes over to hat-rack and puts her hat on her head.]

| CUE The Step-Daughter: But she isn't dressed in black.

PLAYER 2 [an appraising look, head tilted, eyes narrowed]. But I shall be. And much more effectively than you.

| CUE Player 1: Good afternoon, Miss.

PLAYER 2. Good afternoon.

| CUE The Manager: Good — but not so heavily. And you say: "No, sir."

PLAYER 2. No, sir.

| CUE The Manager: Don't stop. Don't stop. We're past the worst of it. Carry on!

PLAYER 2 [recovering, back into the rehearsed register]. No sir... I'll do it myself. [Removes her hat with the efficient gesture of a woman who has done it a hundred times in front of a mirror.]

| CUE Player 1: ... hat. Come and help me choose one from the stock, won't you?

PLAYER 2 [politely demure]. No thank you, sir.

| CUE Player 1: ... you don't. There's always a way round these little matters, you know.

PLAYER 2 [eyes downcast, on cue]. It's not the hat, sir. I couldn't wear it because I am — as you see — you might have noticed. [Touches the front of her dress with the back of her hand.]

| CUE Player 1: in mourning. Of course. I beg your pardon. I'm frightfully sorry.

PLAYER 2 [the rehearsed recovery, voice catching exactly where she has been taught it should catch]. It's I who must thank you. There's no need for you to feel mortified or specially sorry. Don't think any more of what I've said. I must forget that I am dressed so...

| CUE The Father: Yes. He said "Oh."

PLAYER 2 [breaking character, to MANAGER]. Sir, I cannot work with the originals standing five feet away correcting every breath. Either they sit or I sit.

| CUE The Step-Daughter: We will not.

PLAYER 2 [the veteran has had enough — the diva's posture goes from offended to leaving]. I am not going to stand here being made a fool of by that woman. I have been made a fool of — believe me — by considerably better.

Act Three — The Question

PART I The Trap

3 SPEECHES · 41 WORDS

| CUE The Manager: ... when the public was up to the level of that child there.

PLAYER 2. It makes the illusion easier. The audience needs to know which room we are in. They aren't going to guess.

| CUE The Father: ... thing is only — and rightly so — a kind of game...

PLAYER 2 [interrupting indignantly]. A game? We are serious actors, sir. We have training.

| CUE The Father: ... this you of today will look like an illusion to you tomorrow?

PLAYER 2 [whispering]. Is this still the play, or has it become something else?

PART II The Refusal

PLAYER 2 DOES NOT SPEAK IN THIS PART.

PART III The Fountain

1 SPEECH · 9 WORDS

| CUE Player 1 & Player 3: He's dead! dead!

PLAYER 2. No, no, it's only make believe, it's only pretence!
